Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Saturday 20 Mar 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Many areas cloudy Sunday; some warm sunshine in northeast UK.

Today:
Many areas rather cloudy with just odd bright spells, even a little early drizzle possible. Northeast England and much of eastern Scotland should see longer sunny spells, and turning out pleasantly warm. Patchy rain crossing northern Scotland with stronger winds.

Tonight:
After some evening sunshine in eastern and central areas, many areas dry and cloudy although a little light rain in a few places. Turning clearer for Scotland with patchy frost.

Sunday:
Still large areas of cloud at first but brighter skies in the north spreading to all but parts of the west and south, where the odd light shower is possible.

Outlook for Monday to Wednesday:
Largely settled and dry at first with some sunshine, mainly in the east. Probably remaining dry in the south but turning wetter and windier in the northwest from Tuesday.
